

What is Quick-Sale?

Quick sale is a process by which a prospective buyer interested in a piece of art may bypass the bidding process, if and only if, that item of art has no bids previously placed on it. The opportunity to use the Quick Sale process is not available on those art pieces that are marked “N/A” or blank in the quick sale price block, or if the art has already has bids placed on it.

Why Use Quick-Sale?

The benefits are it gives the purchaser the opportunity to buy the art outright (which is effectively what quick-sale does), and gives the purchaser the assurance that they can get the art they want without the risk of losing it to another bidder. It also helps them organize their time, since they do not have to set aside time to check their bids and risk needing to attend the art auction to defend their bids.

How Does Quick Sale Work?

The art buyer notes whether or not a piece of art is available for quick sale (see What is Quick Sale?), and if the piece is still available, gets the assistance of one of the art show staff in marking it sold. (This must be performed by the Art show staff and none other.) It is not policy to let the buyer remove the art from the show early (why miss the opportunity to gloat over getting it?).

When Can Quick Sale Be Used?

Quick sale is in effect at any point when the Art Show is open. It may not be used at any other time.
